Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a faceplate for a cathode ray tube (CRT). Q: How to check whether a label has already been clicked? The title pretty much explains it. I'm using a label in a form that is reused on different pages. However, once the label is clicked, the previously used form loses its controls and its data. How to prevent it from doing that? A: If you're using an ID for your label, it will always exist. You can store the value in a hidden field (since the label is reused): Click Me Then in the click handler:

function clickHandler(event) { document.getElementById("labelForm").querySelector("#labelValue").value = event.target.id; // Do the rest here.... } document.getElementById("labelForm").addEventListener("submit", function(event) { event.preventDefault(); clickHandler(event); });
