OEConnections

This tool is used to connect to other network resources (SMTP, HTTP, FTP, database and so on) without actually opening the corresponding windows on the other computer. This application allows you to connect to other network resources by "dialing" a remote resource (for example, you can connect to other SMTP server). It is particularly useful if you have a server on your local network that has SMTP service on it, but you can't access it directly because you can't log in to it. This tool also allows to reconnect quickly to another host, either to retry or abort your last session. OEConnections Usage: When you start the program, you'll see a list with the available SMB connections. The available connections are sorted by their "Network Type" (for example: SMB, File Sharing, Game, Internet and so on). To connect to another host, you simply select the network type (for example: SMB) and enter the host name.

Once the connection is successfully made, you can disconnect from the remote host by clicking the button called "Disconnect". You can also press CTRL+C or close the window to close OEConnections. If you want to retry the connection, you can click the button called "Retry". This button will also close the window. OEConnections Features: When you close OEConnections, you'll see an information box informing you that all the opened connections are closed and that you have successfully disconnected from remote host. OEConnections Disclaimer: OEConnections is not a tool to hack or change any network settings. This application will show you the existing connections that you have set up and allow you to disconnect or reconnect to remote hosts. This application was designed to be a small tool that will show a list with the outgoing SMB connections and will allow you to disconnect them. How to get and
