Then in CAD Create new project. Navigate to --> Windows --> Accessories --> Command Line Then click "Show All Files" Then paste "polyline.inm" As part of the drug war, the U.S. government has waged an aggressive campaign to stop people from growing medical marijuana in their own homes. It's hard to find someone who wouldn't consider that an overreaction — especially with recent events like the DEA arresting armed employees of a Colorado medicinal marijuana dispensary. But a new study by a group of law professors and doctors presents a strong argument for the government to legalize home-grow. Specifically, the study, published in the peer-reviewed Journal of Law, Medicine and Ethics, suggests that allowing people to grow their own medical marijuana is more cost-effective than the current criminal approach. Home-grow is cost-effective This study is based on the experiences of one Colorado medical marijuana patient, Kenneth Butler, who was diagnosed with HIV-AIDS and Hepatitis C. Butler said his doctor urged him to keep growing his own medicinal marijuana because the current methods of drug distribution are prohibitively expensive. The study is based on simulations that provide a close analysis of the costs of home-grow and the cost of relying on the existing system. According to the researchers, home-grow costs less than 30 percent of the current supply-and-demand method of distribution. The study also suggests that home-grow is more likely to save on enforcement costs and the crime associated with illegal drugs. The fact that home-grow isn't more expensive than the current system of distributing marijuana is interesting. As it stands, the only legal way to get medical marijuana is to go to a dispensary and pay a fee for a strain with a specific dosage. That doesn't mean the patients can't get it for free from friends and family. But when Butler grew the marijuana for himself, he didn't have to pay anything. The study suggests that home-grow is more cost-effective than the current system of distributing marijuana. The report also concludes that home-grow patients are not more likely to get high than patients who take medicine from a dispensary. Indeed, the study suggests that there's actually an advantage to home-grow. Patients who grow their own pot can smoke it multiple times a day. That means they're more likely to stick to their prescribed dose. Home-

What's New In?

"AutoCAD User Experiences: "It's not enough for designers to just produce beautiful drawings—they must also be able to easily collaborate with others. AutoCAD 2023 brings new features to the table, including a new interface, new features, and new ways to organize your drawings." Bilingual interfaces: The new multilingual interface and environment will make your work with the product even more intuitive, faster, and more enjoyable than before. Bundled software for new Office 365 subscriptions: AutoCAD 2023 integrates with your newly purchased Office 365 subscription to streamline and simplify your collaboration workflow. Better search and find: Quickly and easily search through drawings and documents for parts, and filter drawings, annotations, and layers using advanced search features. Collaborate easier: Share drawings and annotate in real-time with others with features such as enhanced client and server support, in-line drawing and annotation, live chat, and more. AutoCAD for new Office 365 subscribers: With AutoCAD 2023, you can quickly and easily access all the latest AutoCAD features when you are connected to Office 365, including the new collaborative tools, real-time integration with Office 365, and enhanced search. Better ways to organize your drawings: You can now easily create, manage, and work with your drawings in a more intuitive way. Now you can organize drawings using new search and find features, groups, tags, and other powerful new features. Leveraging the new innovations and new platforms that Microsoft offers, we are excited about the new innovations we will be introducing in AutoCAD 2023. Now we are looking forward to showing you all the new features that we have implemented in the new product. We will be hosting a 2-hour webinar that will highlight the improvements and enhancements to AutoCAD 2023, as well as the new innovations in the product. Join us on April 26, 2019, at 2:00 p.m. CDT (3:00 p.m. EST) for this live webinar, where we will walk through these new innovations. Register for this webinar on our website. Are you upgrading from previous versions of AutoCAD? If you are currently using AutoCAD 2019 or later, and your primary motivation for upgrading to the latest AutoCAD release is an improved user interface, we recommend that you check out our How
