Reviews Tarnished Knights: -----

This review isn't mine. I decided to do it because it's one of the few reviews I read on the internet that actually *gasp* mentions the game itself. If you want to see more reviews about Tarnished Knights, look here: I'm such a loner that if it wasn't for the internet, I wouldn't know what my friends' opinions are. I'd probably be completely oblivious to what they even like to do. There's no way I can feel the need to know what my friends think, they know what they like. But when it comes to other stuff, I can tell you what I think. But what do they think about the games I like? If I only had their opinions, I wouldn't know which games to buy. Anyway, I'm not like that, I have faith that I know what's good, even if I can't get my friends to agree with me. Here are some of the things I like: 1. Top down view and movement. I know what you're thinking, "Quarter Life Crisis, who the hell likes top-down views these days?" Truth be told, I really have no idea how anything happens in a typical game these days. But with top down views, everything is so much more clear and obvious. Ever play something where you'd asked for a description of the controls or what was going on, and you're told "oh it's just like steering a car"? Well, that's exactly what it is. Sure, those things in the head might not be as important as some of the other features of a game, but it's so much easier to understand things, you know, like how to play the game or what is going on. 2.
