You start on a vacant lot and you have to manage yourself. What do you do? Do you build up a business or a house? You can generate money through different methods such as playing music, crashing your car, stealing, and selling drugs. There's no regular cops in this game. You can run from a police car the same way you'd run from a street criminal. The city is huge and it is divided into 4 regions, Arizona, Florida, New York and Europe. You can drive and explore all of them. After you've saved up enough money, you may buy a house and save your customers. Please enjoy this game because it is the second off-road game which I made. A feature that was added to the Ethereal V2 tool was to enable users to add lights by category. The old method of adding lights was by specifying a spatial node and changing the properties of the light. There are times when this method is alright, but it's not always effective. For example, we had a scene that needed to be lit with enviro lights and there were some spotlights that needed to be used as well. The old way was to go into the locational properties of the light and change them to spot. This was a terrible way of doing it and we were very hit and miss with the properties we needed to change. The new way is to select the "Lights" template and add a new light to it. Then, within the "Lights" template options in the normal template editor you'll see a category section. The first light added will become the "default" light and any light added to that category will be considered the one currently selected. All the properties of other lights added to the category will be changeable. You also have the option of changing the spectrum of each light if desired. The default from the "Lights" template is set to reflect. This is also changeable. This way of adding lights is much faster and much more predictable. If a light has a -1° offset error in it's angle or has some other issues, you can be sure that the properties will remain. The best thing to do is to apply a test light before adding the main lights or other category lights. Here are some images to help show how it works: This feature was released in May of this year and is available in all the editors currently. This has become essential to how we light our scenes. A light set up in the editor - with the first light in the category with a defaulted "speccy" to reflect The light set up in the editor - the selected light has been changed to a different spectrum The light set up in the editor - if you change the category of one light
