The present work concerns the development of a rapid and sensitive assay for the quantification of total nucleic acids:protein in unknown biological samples. The experimental design combines the use of a photosensitizer and a chemiluminescent reporter molecule. The use of a non-denaturing methanol-chloroform extraction allows the complete recovery of total nucleic acids, with no need for further purification. The protocol is based on the oxidation of the reporter by reaction with the photosensitizer under the action of visible light irradiation. The assay, performed in two chromatographic runs, is characterized by the following features: (i) it is specific, since the assay is only triggered by the oxidation of the reporter induced by the photosensitizer; (ii) it is sensitive, since the assay is performed in the linear dynamic range of 0.2-1.0 microg/microL; (iii) it is rapid, since the analysis can be performed in 15 min, and (iv) it allows the use of a small amount of biological
